THE DARGILE RESERVE

The Dargile Reserve comprises an area of 120 hectares of typical box-ironbark forest. It has been used for experimental plantings since 1916, and was declared a reserve in 1973.

In 1916 the area was fenced with rabbit-proof fencing and planting of pines and various eucalypts began.

Plantings were in rows 2.4 metres apart and about 30 ha were planted. Planting ceased in 1925 when row refills were completed. In 1932, survival consisted of about 20 ha of Pinus radiata, 24 ha of Red Ironbark and 8 ha of Blue Gum, with small clumps of other eucalypts.

The Dargile Reserve (Continued from page 1)

In 1932, E. globulus (Blue gum) was recorded to have reached a height of 18 m (60 ft). Since 1932, the majority of the pines and a few of the Red ironbarks have been felled and sold. Otherwise, the reserve is mostly in its natural state.

Kangaroos, wallabies, echidnas and possums, along with abundant bird life may be seen on the reserve.
